Highest sale	[$4.3M · street name]

What actually happened

[Insight 1, e.g. Updated homes sold in under three weeks. Homes that needed work sat past sixty days.]

[Insight 2, e.g. Nearly one in three luxury listings came off the market without selling. Almost every one of them had been priced against active listings rather than closed sales.]

[Insight 3, e.g. Buyers who closed came from outside the area: relocations from Chicago, Seattle, Boston, New York, and Washington, D.C. continued to lead inbound moves, per Allied's 2025 migration data.]

What it means if you are selling

- The gap between homes that sold and homes that expired this quarter was price strategy and presentation, not the homes.
- Buyers are paying full value for finished homes and discounting everything else. A short list of targeted updates is worth more than a lower price.
- Days on market are visible to every buyer. A launch plan with decision points beats a quiet go-live and a price cut at week eight.

What it means if you are buying

- Homes that needed work sat past [60] days and closed below list. That is where the negotiating room is.
- Finished, well-presented homes went in under [three weeks], often with multiple offers. Be ready before they launch, not after.
- We see the pre-market inventory from our agent network before it hits the portals.

How we use this report

Every quarter we rebuild this for each city we work in, then we use it to price the homes we list, to write the offers we make, and to tell you the truth about what your home is worth right now.

At a glance

[24] luxury homes closed in [City] this quarter	Average [$2.4M], median [$2.1M]
[31] days on market on average	Finished homes went in under [three weeks]
[97%] of list price	Homes that needed work closed below list
[9] listings expired without selling	Almost all priced against active listings, not closed sales

Real closed sales, not headlines. That number changed what your home is worth.
